Dear Kristian, dear William,

We have recently come across the following issue: since many years, the Commission publishes in the 'Who's who' in the EU institutions (managed by the Office of Publications) the name of all colleagues, irrespective of their position in the hierarchy. But for different reasons (data protection, pressure from outside the institutions, security issues, etc.), we are considering revisiting this policy and limit the publication in the Who's who of the names and contact details of staff occupying a management position (head of unit and above). This would mean that the contact details of all non-management staff would no longer be published.

It is my understanding that this is already the practice followed by both the European Parliament and the Council.

Could you please confirm that this is the case? As we want to harmonise the approach across the three main institutions, this confirmation would be useful for us to determine whether to confirm this change of practice.

Many thanks in advance.

Kind regards,
Pascal
